ARE DETECTIVES WAY OFF TRACK?

Lawyer Predicts Developments in Case Which Will Implicate Others

LANG BAILS GORDON

If Attorney Henry Greenstein, counsel for Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Lehen, of Stratford avenue, who are now under heavy bail charged with the theft of Mrs. C. M. Cole's bag of jewels, lost by her June 15, makes good in his investigations there will be a few sensations sprung before the case is settled in the criminal superior court.

Attorney Greenstein reiterated his belief in the innocence of his clients, this morning, and said that they had spent their last day in jail for the crime of which they are charged. He said he would investigate the case for himself and while he was not ready to tell what he knows, says he has received information which will lead to a few surprises.

He said this morning that the detectives were no nearer to all the guilty parties in the crime alleged than they ever were. He admitted that they were right in the beginning of the case, but in apprehending the Lehen's he declares they had made a grievous blunder.

When asked if his investigation would be likely to incriminate other Bridgeport people he a thrice hesitated but finally said it probably would.

Gordon's bail was furnished by one of the Lang Brothers Company, pawn-brokers and jewelers, Water street. Mr. Lang said this morning that Gordon was no relative of his and he did it merely to accommodate some friends of Gordon who spoke in the young man's behalf. He said Gordon seemed to him like an "honest young fellow."

The detective department is searching for the missing stones but have not located them.

Mr. Greenstein also commented upon the comparative ease with which Gordon secured bail while well known people like his clients, the Lehen's obtained bonds with great difficulty.

The new shoe-styles for women.

Right at the outset of the season, let us say one thing that will bring comfort to the great majority of women:—The day of the freaky shoe has gone. Shoes now are sensible. The finger of fashion has pointed to a spot midway between the extremes of style and there it has stopped. The result is that shoes are sensible and attractive, are graceful without being too dainty, are plainly planned on comfortable lines and yet fairly gleam with attractiveness of style;—are the very-plain product of skilled and thoughtful designers who counted as much upon comfort as upon appearances.

To some of the shapes, an added beauty is given by curved tops. In many, the vamps are shorter, making the foot look a bit more trim. But best news of all is this: While prices of leather have been advanced, the shoes of this season are the equal in value, dollar for dollar, of any that last season brought forward. We have been able to keep values up without advancing prices a penny.

And now, a word as to materials.

Leather is no longer undisputed monarch. The shoe with top of cravenetted cloth has entered the field. And it is to be reckoned with. To begin with, it looks well. It holds its shape (some makers say even better than leather) and it resists dampness because of the cravenetted process.

Calfskin is as much a favorite as ever. It is proper for wear almost everywhere. It is serviceable and comfortable and is a leather that looks especially well in the shapes of the season.

Bronze kidskin is to be a winter leather too, if you please. Of course, it is light but it wears well—and it is delightfully in harmony with the dress goods shades of the fall.

Patent leather, both light and of medium weight, shines in new shapes; will not lose one whit of its hold.

Stockings from a remarkable maker.

In the recent fight over the tariff, there was one American maker of stockings who occupied an enviable and lonesome position. That was the maker of the stockings here told of and sold in Bridgeport only at this store—Wayneknit stockings.

With all the other American hosiery-men demanding an increase in duty, begging Congress to give them higher protection, declaring that business was being ruined by Europe's competition; he took the opposite stand. He declared that the then-existing duty was high enough; that American makers were protected sufficiently; that it was not fair to increase the tariff and so increase the price to the women of America.

He said that he was not afraid of European competition, that any maker who produced stockings to compare with imported need not fear competition, that it was the man who made inferior sorts who demanded a high-tariff protection. He was ready to meet Europe in the American market without any further advantage than he then had because he was not afraid to match his merchandise against the imported.

You will understand his position, if you will come and look at these handsome Wayneknit stockings that are now ready at the store. No, they are not new here; we have sold them several seasons—and we know of none better at price.
